STORY OF THE THREE DOTS

People often ask why there are three dots in the ‘Tonopah’ part of our logo, and three drips on our T-shirts.

The first stands for ‘blood.’ The founders of Tonopah had adventure and endurance in their veins; necessary for digging mines in the desert. The subsequent wealth drew all kinds of folks, including some who used a gun instead of a pick to get rich. That involved blood as well. Finally, there’s the blood that ties the men and women of Tonopah’s early years to the proud family members of today, who recall their ancestors with pride and awe.

The second represents ‘sweat.’ The earth does not easily give its wealth. Fortune seekers trekked for hundreds of miles through harsh and unforgiving terrain and climate, only to begin the real work upon arrival. Mining back in the early 1900s required bare-knuckled labor for hours each day, often as the desert sun poured down its relentless heat. Sweat indeed.

The third is for ‘beers.’ In turn-of-the-century Tonopah, water was scarce enough, and it was not always particularly safe or palatable. But what could be counted upon was a drink that most everyone in Tonopah was more than familiar with—beer. That which wasn’t brewed locally was brought in as the town grew. The miners, most of whom were immigrants from Europe, had a long and storied history with various kinds of brews. And it was as true then as it is today: there is nothing quite as wonderful after a hard, difficult day than a pint of beer.

Thus, our motto: “Greatness comes from Blood, Sweat, and Beers!”
